

Fighting, Guns and Government- What's more for Schools?

As many people know, America has gun laws that allow students to own guns. Regrettably this has brought about several school shootings where supposedly innocent students have been shot, killed or injured, leaving mental and physical wounds on the children. Donald Trump, current president of the United States has issued another law; arming teachers. There has been debate over this, if a child and teacher came to a standoff, what would happen? And do we even want to think about the consequences that may follow?

Emma González, survivor of the Florida shooting that killed several of her classmates has become internet famous after she made a gun-control speech after an anti-gun rally. The nineteen year old is now an activist advocate for gun control and has become an idol for many people.

Following school shootings, American students spread the word to stand up for their rights. Yesterday at 10am, Students all over the states got up and left their lessons to march and take to the streets as a method of speaking to the Government. The reasoning behind this was the government refused to ban guns- this sparked fire and fury causing Americans to simply leave. It was a brave act as they could've gotten into trouble with teachers, police or the government themselves. It didn't stop them though. Following this, the protest ran even as far as a small town Pudsey in the UK where ten students left their English lesson. These students were trying to do the greater good but unfortunately it didn't come across that way and they got into mild trouble. Whether their actions were sincere is debatable, they still tried their best.
